MRS. ATTY. GENERAL WILLIAMS. [Washington Cor. of Cincinnati Gazette.] Mrs. Williams has after all been the head and front of the offending. Into her early history has been inserted the phalanges aforesaid, and her shortcomings have been inspected by the light of social magnifying glasses, causing her verdict to go forth to the world, "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin!" And, according to a flat on her later life, "Mrs. Williams' carriage has stopped her husband's way to the Chief Justiceship.' She is a womant above the medium height, with a small, well-shaped head, crowned with wavy black hair, a straight, rather thin nose, large, melting dark eyes, arched over with delicate eyebrows, rather too much color for the proverbial spirituelle of American women; a long, white, full throat, and neck, bust and arms bordering on the superb, with a slight touch of Cleopatra voluptuousness. She carries herself easily, gracefully, proudly. Thus she appears at the age trembling somewhere between the late thirties or early forties. Her manners are unexceptionally cordial, and her dressing rich. She must have been very striking as a girl, of the pronounce type, with startling boldness of beauty given by the contrast between black hair and dark fringed eyes. with clear, fair skin and heightened color. But age and association have toned the contrasts down to mellower tints, and her wonderfully qui k intuitions have adapted her to the various con-naturally filled. Her early history is as full of romance as one of Dumas' novels, and I dare Rhoda Broughton to produce a story to eclipse it. At sixteen she married against her parents' wishes a man whose subsequent treatment of her vindicated the family's disapproval and her application for divorce. These were the days when her headstrong, impetuous nature was strong within her, and her own will her only law. Following its dictates, she drifted Westward, perchance for adventure, peradventure in hopes of a fortune. There, girl-woman as she was, with the waves of self still surging unsubdued, after teaching music for awhile, she consented to bow her neck a second time to an unhappy matrimonial yoke. Her second husband, Mr. George, was a driver on one of the lines of stages crossing the plains, and proved to be a good-for-nothing fellow, who frequently abused her, and had nothing to recommend him but ome face. A pretty may-care, han picture his wife often afforded the tourist as, standing before their log cabin, she stood with her white arms, bright face and simple dress, hanging out the family linen. Her husband's treatment became at last so upendurable that friends procured for her the services of Judge Williams. then a quiet Westera lawyer, who loosed her from her unhappy thraldom through the medium of a divorce. Mrs. George still Westward pushed her way to California, and taught school in San Francisco, where years afterward Judge Williams met and married the woman, the memory of whose peculiar beauty had never left him.

When she heard her former husband, Mr. George, was sick, she travelled miles to watch over him in his last hours, and was with him when he died. The woman has marvelous adaptability, and spirit and nerve, and ambition enough for Agrippina herself, and withal the tact and executive ability to raise herself along with the advancing fortunes of her husband. It may be that her ambition has o'erreached itself, and that it would have been better for her had she rested content with her husband as Attorney General, for in that position the cobra society inflated not its venomous head, and such whispers as had been floating about were allowed to vanish in thin air. Now she lies stranded on the sands of her own high reachings, stung to death by the asp of social tongues. I for one am sorry that from so brave a spirit the goblet of luscious realization has been so rudely anatched.

A WONDERFUL CLOOK. - We clip the following paragraph from a very interesting foreign correspondence to the Boston Journal, headed "From Germany to Italy:"

ZURICH, SWITZ., Sept. 1, 1867. Our next stopping place was Strasbourg, on the French side of the Rhine. The cathedral here is of red sandstone and is very large. The spire is very elaborate and runs up to the enormous height of 474 feet, said to be the highest in the world. The interior of the cathedral is quite plain, and contains the wonderful clock that has made Strasbourg celebrated the world over. It is in one corner of the cathedral and is certainly a curiosity. A crowd collects in front of it every day at twelve o'clock to see it go through its performances. The clock indi-cates eclipses of the sun and moon, days of the week and month, rise and setting of the sun and moon each day, and various other astronomical calculations. It keeps a figure of the sun and moon in motion, and each day of the week is represented by a chariot with horses, which comes out of one side of the gallery, and, during the day, passes around to the other side and disappears. Two little angles sit in front of the clock; one strikes a bell every quarter of an hour, and the other at noon reverses the hour glass which he holds in his hands. In the gallery above, a skeleton, with soythe in one hand and bell in the other, stands in the centre. From a little door at the side, four figures, boyhood, youth, manhood and old age, issue; one each quarter of the hour march across the gallery, strike the bell and walk very naturally to the door on the other side and disappear. At twelve at noon the skeleton strikes the hour upon his bell, and old age comes out and strikes the four quarters and retires. Below the angel reverses his hour glass, and above, in the upper gallery of all, the twelve apostles march out in succession and bow to the Saviour as they pass Him, who raises his hand to each in the act of blessing them. They pass on and disappear on the other side. On a pillar at the side a cock flaps his wings and The clock was four years building and is decidedly unique. The figures are about a foot in height."

PROGRESS OF RECONCILIATION.—At the late convention of veterans of the Mexican war, in Washington Gen. Cadwallader said he sincerely hoped that Congress will at once erasd from the statute books all laws which excluded from the pension rolls those veterans of the Mexican war and the war of 1812 who served
